The effect of such change shall enter into force upon the receipt of such notice. notify in writing the other thereof. The effect of such change shall enter into force upon the receipt of such notice.

Article 8 Force majeure

Neither of the parties shall be considered to breach the Contract where the performance of their contractual obligations has been prevented by any circumstances pertaining to force majeure occurring after the conclusion of the Contract and before the obligation performance deadline.

The term force majeure used herein means a situation in which the performance of contractual obligations of a contracting party becomes impossible due to extraordinary external events which could not have been predicted, nor could they have been prevented, avoided or eliminated by the party and for which neither of the parties is responsible.

If a contracting party considers that any circumstance of force majeure which may affect the performance of their obligations has occurred, they shall immediately inform the counterparty thereof orally, and in writing within 3 days from the occurrence of such circumstance. Such notice shall contain relevant details about the nature, possible duration and likely effects of the circumstance, and evidence of its occurrence. A contracting party which fails to notify the counterparty shall be liable to the counterparty for any damage they may incur due to such failure. Unless otherwise instructed by the Contracting entity in writing, the Supplier shall continue with the performance of their contractual obligations to the extent possible and shall explore different methods of performing the Contract. The Supplier shall apply a different method of performance only based on the Contracting entity's instruction.

Where the Supplier has incurred additional costs due to the Contracting entity's instruction, they shall be entitled to reimbursement of such costs. The Contracting entity shall approve the requested amount before executing the payment.

Where the circumstances of force majeure exceed 90 days, either party may terminate the Contract by written notice with a notice period of 30 days from the receipt thereof. Where the circumstances of force majeure cease to exist for the duration of the notice period, the Contract shall remain in force. Otherwise, the termination shall enter into force and the contracting parties shall be released from their obligations.
